A spokesman for Nottingham-shire County police said the trouble began late Tuesday night when 500 men descended on the mining vil-lage of Sutton-in-Ashfield.

About 60,000 of the 183,000 members of the National Union of Mineworkers have defied the strike call and many of them work in Nottinghamshire. Their refusal to strike has enraged union militants.

The police spokesman said the miners attacked 18 cars belonging to working miners at the Silverhill mine at Sutton-in-Ashfield and smashed dozens of office windows at the pit.

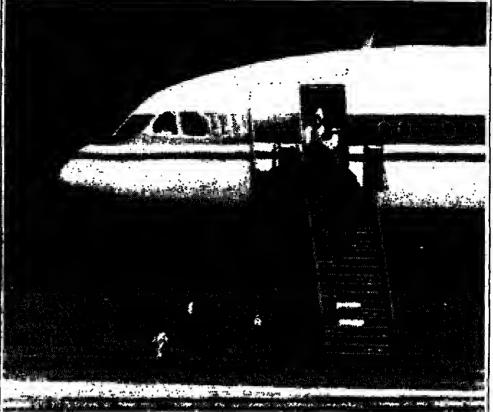

About an hour later, 1,000 men swept through the village of Bircotes and attacked the Harworth mine nearby, again smashing windows and damaging cars of working miners. They also overturned a police car.

Shortly afterward, the police said, about 150 men attacked the regional offices of the National Coal Board in Doncaster. They arrived in a convoy of 30 cars and a truck, jumped out and hurled bricks and rocks.

In another development, two Yorkshire miners said they had started legal action to force the union to hold a strike ballot. The High Court action by Bob Taylor Yorkshire, home territory of Ar-thur Scargill, the union's president, might said that a second hijacker "It's time the rank and file had

Soviet SS-20s Have Doubled . Aides Say

By Leslie H. Gelb New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Soviet Union has more than doubled its deployment of $$-20 mediumrange nuclear missiles, most of them aimed at Western Europe, since 1979, according to intelli-gence sources and officials in the Reagan administration.
The sources said this week that

Moscow now had 378 SS-20s carrying a total of 1,134 nuclear warheads. This compares to 140 SS-20s with three warheads each in December 1979. That was the date on which the North Atlantic Treaty Organization decided to deploy 572 Pershing-2 ballistic missiles and ground-launched cruise missiles with one warhead each by 1989 — unless an arms control agreement were reached first with he Soviet Union.

Advisers to Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic presidential nominee, said that this too would lead to a questioning of Mr. Reagan's ba-sic foreign policy philosophy. The president has maintained that a substantial U.S. military buildup is the best way to bring Moscow to the bargaining table and gain Sovier concessions.

By the Reagan administration's own testimony, there is no question that changes in the nuclear balance in Europe and Asia have put the United States in a weaker position.

In his annual report to Congress earlier this year, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger stated that the SS-20 deployments "have eroded the credibility of NATO's deterrent posture."

But Reagan administration officials are consoled to some degree by the fact that the NATO alliance held firm to the December 1979 decision to deploy medium-range missiles, despite Soviet pressure face Western Europe, but many of and opposition within Western Euthe remaining 135 in the easiern rope, and that the United States part of the Soviet Union are within has now ended the Russians' medium-range missile monopoly in Eu-

BERN (AP) - Two Soviet soldiers captured by Afghan rebels and interned in Switzerland for two years under an international agreement were released Wednesday and returned to the Soviet Union, the Swiss

The two were not identified by the Foreign Office or the International Committee of the Red Cross in Geneva, which negotiated the international accord. Under the agreement, soldiers captured by Afghans fighting Soviet forces are to be interned in Switzerland for two years, or until the end of "hostilities" in Afghanistan.

The first three internets were released in May. The return of two more Soviet prisoners on Wednesday leaves five Russians still interned at the military detention center at Zugerberg, south of Zurich.

Ex-Astronaut Wins Senate Primary

DETROIT (AP) - Jack Lousma, a former astronaut, has won Michigan's Republican primary election for a U.S. Senate seat. Mr. Lousma won more than 60 percent of the vote Tuesday to defeat a former congressman, Jim Dunn. Mr. Lousma will run against Senator Carl Levin, a Democrat, in November.

In Missouri, the attorney general and lieutenant governor will run against each other to succeed Governor Christopher Bond, a Republican; who was prohibited by state law from seeking a third term. In primaries, Lieutenant Governor Kenneth Rothman defeated six Democratic rivals, and Attorney General John Ashcroft defeated a Republican challenger and a perennial candidate.

A convicted felon, Alex Fazzino, also won a Missouri House primary election, which he described as a decision by a "jury of my peers." In the Democratic primary two weeks after he was convicted of extorting money in return for a legislative favor on a bill, Mr. Fazzino easily won his bid to seek a ninth consecutive term. He has oo Republican opposition but first must face sentencing of up to 20 years in prison.

U.S., Uganda Discuss Aid Suspension

WASHINGTON (AP) — The governments of Uganda and the United States have begun discussing Kampala's decision to suspend a $100,000 U.S. military aid program, following remarks by U.S. officials on the alleged deterioration of human rights in Uganda.

But Alan Romberg, the State Department's deputy spokesman, said Wednesday that diplomatic efforts have been hampered by faulty communications between Washington and Kampala because of a power outage in the Ugandan capital.

A Düsseldorf court sentenced Mr. Wisner last year to six years in prison on charges involving the extermination of 31 prisoners at Riga. He appealed to a higher court, which returned the case to the lower tribunal, saying the jury had not fully considered the fact that Mr. Wisner had to carry out orders by his superiors. All but three counts were thrown out for lack of evidence in the new trial.

Saudi King, Swiss Settle Complaint

GENEVA (Reuters) — King Fahd of Saudi Arabia has paid an indisclosed sum to neighbors of his Geneva villa who claimed damages for inconvenience caused by building work, lawyers from the king and his ighbors said Wednesday.

The out-of-court settlement led to the withdrawal of a civil complaint seeking 450,000 Swiss francs (about $220,000) for inconvenience as a result of noise, dust and Sunday work that the neighbors said they suffered during the building of the 27-room lakeside home.

The neighbors also claimed disturbance from cameras peering into their homes, all-night security floodlights and electronic devices that interfered with television reception. King Fahd has yet to visit his new home, which took four years to build.

Tax Issue Catches Reagan on Defensive

By Steven R. Weisman

SANTA BARBARA, California To the surprise of some of his supporters, President Ronald Reagan's re-election campaign has been thrown on the defensive and caught up in apparent contradictions over the issue of raising taxes to reduce the federal deficit.

Two weeks ago the president's top aides seemed delighted by the unusual statement of Walter F. Mondale that he would raise taxes if elected president. A senior White House official predicted then that Mr. Reagan would easily dismiss the Democratic presidential nominee's contention that the president would also raise taxes in 1985.

The day after Mr. Mondale made his assertion in his acceptance speech in San Francisco, a senior White House aide said that the Reagan campaign had just been handed a wonderful gift: an opportunity to hammer at one of Mr.

Reagan's favorite messages.

White House officials maintained Tuesday that their basic re-elected, they expect a package deal similar to the one Congress passed this year and in 1982, in Reagan's favorite messages. White House officials mainpoint was still getting across. "We still think the impression is out there that Ronald Reagan doesn't want to raise taxes, and Walter Mondale does want to raise taxes." said a presidential aid:

Bad Population Politics

Delegates to the second International Conference on Population, under way in Mexico City, can take note of some progress in the past decade, wittle planning to meet a continuing crisis in the remaining years of the century Since the first United Nations-sponsored meeting in Bucharest 10 years ago, there has been a measurable and important decline io the rate of population growth, not only io the developed world but in some poorer countries as well. Mexico is a good example of both the progress and the problems.

Ten years ago Mexico's population was growing at a rate of 3.3 percent. Now, because the country has devoted resources and energy to population planning, the growth rate is only 2.6 percent. Unfortunately, even at this rate its population will double in the next 26 years, in part because death rates have been declining.

In countries that have less successful programs, the situation is already critical. Forty-two percent of all children under age 5 suffer from malnutrition; in the Third World, one in 10 die before their first birthday. One-fourth of the world's families live in makeshift shelter. A billion people lack elean drinking water, and 2 billion have no basic sanitation facilities.

In light of these statistics, and of projections recently published by the World Bank that can conservatively be described as frightening, what is the responsibility of the United States? Traditionally it has provided leadership, resources, teachers and health experts to this international effort. But the position advocated in Mexico City by Reagan administration delegates heralds a change. Although U.S. law already prohibits the expenditure of any U.S. aid money for abortions, the Reagan administration would go far beyond this restriction, cutting off all funds to any organization — the International Planned Parenthood Federation, for example — that uses other money for abortion programs. Because many of these groups are dependent on U.S. support, a withdrawal of funds would severely restrict the very programs that the Reagan administration sees as an acceptable alternative to abortion.

U.S. delegates go also with the message that if the free-enterprise system is allowed to work, there will be sufficient economic growth to furestall crisis. Robert McNamara, former president of the World Bank, rightly assesses this naive and dangerous theory: "Americans will be laughed out of the conference if they stress that theme. It's absurd."

It is tragic that domestic political pressures have threatened U.S. commitment to international population assistance at a time when Third World countries need U.S. help most. — THE WASHINGTON POST.

Misleading Indicators

The U.S. government's index of "leading economic indicators" dropped nine-tenths of 1 percent in June — the first drop in almost two years, some news reports said. True, but misleading. The index is a composite of 12 monthly statistics that can foretell trends. Claims for unemployment insurance, for instance, predict shifts in toemployment. New building permits signal future construction. When all 12 numbers are blended and the index rises or falls consistently, it is saying that general activity will rise or fall.

When the index reverses direction for a few months, turning up in recession or down in a boom, it is signaling change. One month's reversal is meaningless (also in the case of the errade upturn in July's unemployment). The "leading" index often bobs up and down after a boom or recession is more than a year old. Besides, it is routinely revised. In the year before June, four minus months were revised into pluses; March swung from minus 1.1 to plus 0.3 percent. That is because the index is first published four weeks after a month's end. without two of the 12 components - inventories and loan activity.

Why doesn't the Commerce Department wait for final numbers? That would take three or four more weeks - too long for impatient planners, forecasters and the media. As is, the leading indicators only signaled the last recession by a hair; it began three months after the index started pointing down. But the index has signaled one recession 23 months in advance.

No economist relies on any single statistic for the whole pieture, and most wait to see three months of this index before calling a trend. But the heightened attention that this statistic gets warrants its perfection. With recovery now 20 months old and an election at stake, the American economy attracts global interest. Steady but slower growth is desirable. Misleading indicators will not detect it.

— THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Notable, Notorious, Gone

Among the memorable Welshmen created by Shakespeare is the crackbrained mystic, Owen Glendower of "Henry IV," who claims, among other things, the power to "call spirits from the vasty deep." To which his ally in arms, Hotspur, replies sarcastically, "But will they come when you do call for them?"

For Richard Burton, the flamboyant Welsb actor who died last Sunday at age 58, the magic did come forth quite often when he called it, although certainly not nearly so many times as be set foot on stage or before the camera. A brilliant stage actor, he joined the westward parade of British writers and actors that has been going on fairly steadily sioce Hollywood was invented, and in doing so, many of his critics said, he failed to fulfill his promise. But he did not fail to make a dent.

Two marriages to Elizabeth Taylor and leg-endary bouts of drinking punctuated a screen and stage career that would have been ootable even without the notoriety, encompassing as it did some truly great performances as well as some dismal ones. "He chose a rather mad way of throwing away his theater career, but obviously be became very famous and a world figure through being a film star," said Sir John Gielgud, Said Mr. Burton ooce: "I rather like my reputation ... that of a spoiled genius from the Welsb gutter, a drunk, a womanizer, it's rather an attractive image." But a rakish image of the sort that pleased

Mr. Burton takes its toll, and in his later performances he often appeared as a pullyfaced caricature of his younger and riveting self. One thing he did not lose was the voice, a voice that stays in the miod when, much else about his acting has gone out of it. He recorded some Shakespeare, and it may be one of his finer monuments. His portrayal of Coriolanus on record, in which this son of a Welsh coal miner plays with perfect icy disdain the aristocratic Roman military hero who cannot bring himself to make the slightest gesture to please the mob, brings a special dimension to a play whose lines, coming from a less convincing actor, could sound ridiculous io these democratic times. Unlike Coriolanus, Mr. Burton made his concessions to the popular taste, but like him be wore his flaws on his toga and he did things on a memorable scale.

Pakistani Fear of Encirclement

There is no need to be an American "hawk" to appreciate the worries caused Pakistan by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Moral condemnation of the rape of an independent nation and the economie difficulties involved in integrating more than 3 million refugees are at present only secondary considerations. The proximity of Russian forces, underscored by repeated violations of Pakistan's airspace and taken in conjunction with the close contacts between Moscow and Delhi, have created a fear of encirclement that pins Pakistan's armed forces to its Indian and Afghan fron-tiers and inhibits the country's foreign policy activities, notably the application of pressure on Iran to end the Gulf war. All these factors are given extra weight by the fact that Islam-abad can no longer rely on Chinese backing as it could in the '60s and '70s.

Romania: Time Out for Medals

Whatever the motivation, the Romanian presence at the Los Angeles Olympic Games should be welcomed. But let us not forget that Romania is still part of the Soviet bloc and likely to remain so for some time, albeit reluc-tantly. Its "independence" is a heavily quali-fied one, and would not be permitted in go beyond the gadfly stage in a really critical moment in East-West relations.

Two trans-Atlantic liners have come within hailing distance of it. Officers of the Cuba sighted it 800 miles off the Azores. Part of the ship's log read: "It was approximately 25 meters long, four or five meters high, with a small head and a long neck, with two bumps on its back." GENEVA — The world's population has doubled to 4.8 billion since 1950, adding 2.5 billion people in less than a generation. If present trends continue, the ligure will be close to 10 billion within two more generations. Such growth could perpetuate poverty in most of the developing countries, which already have nearly a billion destinute people, including 150 million in famine conditions.

The import oceds of developing countries in cereals alone would jump to 250 million metric tons by the year 2000 from 105 million currently, and the number of people denied two square meals a day would rise by a third.

These alarming forecasts by the World Bank and United Nations experts are the backdrop to the 150-nation International Conference on Population being held in Mexico City from Aug. 6 to 13.

Within 70 years, Third World countries may contain 8.5 billion people, up from today's 3.8 billion, but they would share barely 20 percent of the world's production.

to slow population growth," the bank says in its latest annual report.

The 85 recommendations before the Mexico City conference are aimed mainly at making birth control an integral part of the development strategies of developing countries. The key proposal asks governments to ensure that couples have "a voluntary and free choice in accordance with cultural values."

However, implementing some of the recommendations may be beyond the capacities forts to stabilize populations so that they do not grow significantly. The World Bank estimates that, failing such measures, world population will not stabilize until the year 2150, when it will have hit 11 billion.

There is a real risk that the opportunity offered by the Mexico City conference to attack the most critical aspects of population ommendations may be beyond the capacities of the countries most in need. The genius of harassed clerks in any government would be taxed by having to translate into specific actions such open-ended jargon as "an integrated approach taking into account interrelationships between population; resources, environment and development."

Rising numbers of destitute infants cannot be prevented even if the increase of births be prevented even if the increase of births were to be miraculously cut down to I percent from the current 2-to-4-percent levels in de-veloping countries. More destitution can be prevented only by vigorous measures to raise Third World living standards alongside ef-growth will be lost. One reason is the heavy reliance on government Intervention rather than on motivating people by creating condi-tions in which having large families becomes imprecessary. Another is the reluctance of Western governments to increase aid for Third World economic development. The central issue in voluntary birth control is that of incentives. Couples must be persnaded to forgo the private gain of having another child in favor of the gain to society of not having one. But incentives work only if those at whom they are aimed see a long-term benefit in allowing themselves to be enticed.

The government in India has tried giving rifts to those who accept sterilization. The reach government offers cash and medals to those who agree to have large families. Neither has been able to make men and women go against their own personal judgments.

There is a line beyond which reliance on vernment intervention does not work. If this second conference is to prove more effective than the first, it needs to step across that line to involve the real decision-makers.

Hong Kong, Singapore

HONG KONG and Singapore are testimony to the better quality of life that can be realized through a combination of sensible policies far both economic growth and population size. As those countries began their development pro-cesses, they recognized the need for a "safety net," in the form of family planning, so that future human growth would oot negate hard-earned economic gains. Today they are two of only four developing countries that have achieved replacement-level fertility.

The Family Planning Association of Hong Kong has been operating birth control clinics since 1950. Intensified voluntary family planning has contributed heavily to a decline in the birthrate from 40 per thou-sand people in 1956 to the current 16 per thousand. More than 90 percent of Hong Kong's married women of reproductive age use some method of family planning, according to the most recent surveys.

Back in the 1960s, the government of Singapore reached the conclusion, in the words of President Lee Kuan Yew, that unless the pop-ulation explosion could be checked "all other efforts in health, education and economic development would come to naught, because each time you are climbing up the tree, you reach a greasy patch and you slip down again."

Singapore considered its population problem serious enough to warrant the use of disincentives. Hospital delivery fees rise with the number of children so that the birth of a third child can cost twice as much as the first. There is no paid maternity leave after the second child. And while the first two children in a family are allowed to attend nearby schools, the third child may be bused. President Lee attributes the decline in Singapore's average of less then two children per family to these measures.

Overpopulation exacerbates poverty and unemployment in a great number of developing countries. Poverty and rapid population growth reinforce each other," says World Bank President A.W. Clausen. "The international community has no alternative but to cooperate, with a sense of urgency, in an effort in slow population growth if devel-opment is to be achieved." About 80 percent of people in the developing world live in countries that see their birthrates as too high. Many of these countries, such as Bangladesh, Pakistan, Haiti and Ethiopia, are so desperately poor and their quality of life is deteriorating at such a rate that they cannot be compared even remotely with Hong Kong or Singapore. Without a sub-stantial slowdown of their population growth, the outlook for breaking their continuing cycles of poverty is virtually hopeless.

- Werner Fornos, president of the Washington-based Population: Institute, commenting to the International Herald Tribune.

A Different Tune

ASPAR Weinberger, then secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, led the U.S. delegation to the 1974 pop-ulation conference in Bucharest. His message was quite different from the one the present administration has crafted. "Rapid population growth makes development more fficult in many countries," Mr. Weinberger said. "Immediate con-sumption diverts resources from social and economic improvement. Importation of food depletes limited foreign exchange. The oumber of children for whom basic education cannot be provided continues to increase. Chronic and growing underemployment and unemployment are becoming more tragic for individuals and more serious for nations."

The new policy ignores those concerns, charging that overlooks the real problem — bad economic poli-cies. The theme is consistent with Mr. Reagan's fondness for govern-ment-bashing. But in an interna-tional forum that message will come across as a heavy-handed condemnation of governments that America expects to be its friends. And the message will be delivered by a delegation notably lacking in persons with experience of the population pressures Third World nations face.

Sara Engram, writing in The Baltimore Evening Sun.

Small Is Beautiful

I F IT does nothing else, the Inter-national Conference on Population will have achieved a major victory if it succeeds in alerting the American people in general, and the Reagan administration in particular, to the seriousness and complexity of the world's population problems. I admit to being startled at how many people in the West, par-ticularly in the United States, still scoff at the whole notion of an overcrowded planet. They dismiss develcoment assistance as having been a failure because of alleged waste and corruption. But any reporter who has been to poor countries and bothered to talk to ordinary people will testify that small, not large, families are generally desired.

When given the opportunity and means to limit family size, most people will generally do so. When it is demonstrated to people that "small is beautiful," their choice will be for small families, oot large ones. But the poor countries need help.

Now a 'Weapons Culture' in America: Arms Spending Can Smother Dissent

SEATTLE — A record U.S. mili-tary budget is emerging from fi-oal Senate-House oegotiations. I agree with the conclusion that family planning programs should be supported, but the arguments in favor are often weak.

Simplistic, either/or arguments about population control vs. eco-nomic development as cause of or cure for poverty are meaningless un-less put in the context of specific socioeconomic simutions and unlesss income distribution is measured. The articles and editorials do not seriously address the abortion issue, which motivated the Reagan admin-istration's position. What is most curious, however, is that there is not one word about women. Hundreds of thousands of women die each year from illegal abortions performed by untrained persons in unhygienic conditions; and untold numbers more suffer from related infections for years afterward. Millions risk illegal abortion because they have no access to safe abortions, nor to safe and effective contraception.

Poor women are dying from complications of pregnancy and child-birth — deaths which could have been prevented. The World Health Organization estimates that rates are 250-to-1,000 per 100,000 live births in parts of the developing world, whereas they are closer to 10-to-20 per 100,000 in developed countries. The deaths result from bad health and malnutrition, linked with excessive pregnancies; and they reflect the interrelated conditions of women's poverty and low status.

Poor women, too, are the targets of population control programs. They suffer from negative effects of contraceptives and die from abuses of sterilization. They face agonizing threats from husbands and families for violating social customs.

Battle Under Way for Afrikaners' Soul

Rightists Seek to Regain Control, Block Establishment's Easing of Apartheid

By Glenn Frankel hington Post Service

PRETORIA, South Africa - A stately stone mansion in an eastern suburb of this capital city has become the headquarters of a crusade to recreate South African history.

There, under the watchful gaze of a watercolor portrait of apartheid's chief evangelist and archi-tect, the late Hendrik Verwoerd, members of a new generation are trying to mobilize fellow white Afrikaners into rejecting changes they think will destroy white political power and the culture they have built for 300 years.

The Afrikaners A Tribe Divided

Third of four articles

The main political leader of this movement is Andries P. Treurnicht, a member of Parliament and former Dutch Reformed minister. He broke two years ago with the majority in theruling National Par-ty over the government's constitutional plan to extend limited political rights to South Africans of mixed-race and Asian descent.

He and other rightist members of the party were then expelled, and they formed a new political organization, the Conservative Party of South Africa. fts power base is in the traditional rural centers of the

But the movement's spiritual leader is Carel Boshoff, Mr. Verwoerd's son-in-law, who at age 56 has broken ranks with the Afrikaner establishment he epitomized for a generation.

From their mansion home, he and his wife, Anna, have launched Afrikaner Volkswag (Sentinels of the People), a cultural movement whose ambitious goal is to reunite the Afrikaner community behind traditional policies and recapture the leadership role they contend

In the close-knit, deeply religious, ancestor-conscious world of the Afrikaner, many people think it is Mr. Boshoff, not Mr. Treumicht, who poses the ultimate threat to the government. He is purposefully following the same blueprint that the Dutch-descended Afrikaners used in the 1930s and 1940s to win control of South Africa from the English-speaking whites.

"It is a war for the Afrikaners' soul, and it is being waged in all fields," said Willem Kleynhans, a political scientist at the University of South Africa. "Mr. Boshoff is claiming all the symbols of Afrika-ner nationalism: the history, the heroes, the flags."

Despite the fact that the Afrikaner right is outnumbered by the Nationalists — in Parliament the margin is 125 seats to 17 — few analysts are willing to dismiss its potential, for the Conservatives speak to some of the deepest emotions in the Afrikaners: their sense of group identity, their respect for the past and their fears.

Public opinion surveys consistently show Afrikaners to be more fearful of integration than their English-speaking white counterparts. A poll by the sociologist Nic J. Rhoodie last year in Randburg, a Johannesburg suburb generally held to he a liberal outpost, showed 71 percent of the Afrikaners there damantly opposed to the desegregarion of public facilities such as swimming pools, libraries and adult education centers.

The view was shared by 20 percent of English speakers. The gap was even more striking with blacks; 93 percent of them said they favored full desegregation.

"In our minds we may be for reform, but in our hearts all Afrikaners are HNP," said Rene Reyneke, a young commodities market worker in Pretoria, referring to the Herstigte National Party, the most

This is the heart of Mr. Boshoff's appeal, "In 1959, Dr. Verwoerd said the policy of the National Party is to strive for a permanent white South Africa, no matter what the dangers," he said, "That is still our position. It's the National Party that has drifted away, not us."

Both Mr. Bosboff and Mr. Treurnicht, in separate interviews. denied that racism was the motivating factor behind apartheid. Likesisted that they were aware of the personal suffering—families being inm apart, people forced to move from their longtime homes and the petty humiliations caused by inferior legal status — that the apatheid system has imposed on blacks.

"We are not insensitive to these problems," said Mr. Treurnicht, "but we do believe that in the long run the races are so different that they are better off living apart. A unitary system will only lead to friction and bloodshed."

And so, the Conservatives say, the entire structure of apartheid must be maintained even to the petty details, such as separate parks and water fountains. Because the economy needs black labor, some will he allowed to remain in the whites' territory, but only as guests.

as, will lose their South African citizenship and be required to become citizens of the rural "home-lands." That is the ultimate logic of 'separate development," the modern euphemism for apartheid. For the Nationalists, the existence of the Conservative movement validates their claim to be a party of reform. It also serves as a convenient bogeyman to cite to critics who contend that the Nationalists are moving ton slowly.

At the same time, National Party

Nimeiri's Plan to Make Sudan an Islamic State Stalls Amid Opposition

By Olfat Tohamy Washington Post Service

CAIRO - The drive by President Gaafar Nimeiri of Sudan to turn his country into an Islamic republic has stalled as a result of increasing domestic opposition. General Nimeiri announced in September that he was making Isamic law the law of the land.

The decision was followed by changes in the criminal law system that mandated harsh Islamic ounishments for crimes, such as the amputation of hands and feet for theft and flogging for possession of alcohol. Later, General Nimeiri proposed constitutional amendments that would permit him to proclaim laws without getting par- army. iamentary endorsement.

About 70 percent of Sudan's 20 million people are said to be Mosem, but the Islamic codes have angered residents in the south, which is mostly Christian or ani-mist. Animists believe in the exisence of spirits separable from bod-

The measures have also strained ties with Egypt and the United States. Egypt helped General Nimeiri take over after a coup, and the two countries are linked by a mutual defense pact.

The United States also has announced that it will cease to proide weapons and other military equipment to Sudan to fight the nsurgents in the south.

In a June 12 memorandum to General Nimeiri, the second vice president. Joseph Lagu, and his predecessor. Abel Alier, who is now in exile, warned the president against changing the Sudanese consutution. Both are Christian political leaders from the south.

They reaffirmed their commit-ment to the 1972 Addis Ababa agreement that ended a 17-year civil war and granted autonomy to the

As General Nimeiri moved to implement Islamic law, or sharia, he also redivided the southern half of the country and changed the political formula there, a move that has led to a renewal of rebel activity in the region. The two leaders referred to a clause in the agreement providing for peaceful coexistence among all religions in Sudan and said that "it was not at all wise then to legislate against traditional beliefs, nor could there be a justification for it

They asked General Nimeiri to call a nationwide referendum or bold an open debate on the issue. Already in the past few months, General Nimeiri proclaimed a state of emergency on April 29 and shuffled his cabinet to include more members of the Moslem Brotherhood fundamentalist group to pave the way for sweeping government changes.

Under the proposals, the president would become imam, or the religious and political authority in the country, and he would thus be above questioning or trial. He would appoint all 10p government and army officials. Consideration of the proposals ended July 11 when a petition signed by 98 of the 151 members of parliament requested that the debate be adjourned. The move, sponsored by 37 members from the south, has delayed voting on the subject until the parliament, or National People's Assembly, reconvenes in November. Despite this, some of General Nimeiri's opponents say the president could seek to have the changes put into effect by the recently formed Shura council, a grouping of top government officials dominated by the Moslem Brotherhood.

The grouping comprises Mr. Lagu's Sudan African National Union, Mr. Alier's Southern Front, the Sudanese Communist Party, the National Unionist Party and the Umma Parry, whose leader, Sadeq Mahdi, is in prison.

jumped 50 percent in the last 11 years, and migration from the countryside to the capital is continuing unabated. Officials at the National Housing Bank say they lack resources to meet the demand for housing. From now to turn of the century, construction projects sponsored by the bank are expected to produce only 465,000 new units, a number that bank officials concede is wholly inadequate.

Rising Carbon Dioxide Level Affects Growth Rates of Plants

By Erik Eckholm

Ancient, gnarled pine trees struggling to survive at timberline in the mountains of Nevada and California have grown surprisingly fat, perhaps pre-saging momentous changes in the landscape of the Scientists measuring those trees believe they provide the first evidence that the growth of the Earth's vegetation is being accelerated by the rise in atmosoheric carbon dioxide.

Quite apart from its much-discussed climatic implications, the continuing climh in CO₂, through its direct effect on photosynthesis, may profoundly transform the balance of nature over the decades to come, many scientists warn. Some species could be driven to extinction. Familiar natural haunts may be taken over by new mixes of grasses and trees, of butterflies and hirds. And human diets will be altered along the way.

The buildup of CO₂ in the atmosphere has already caused alarm because of the climatic changes expected to result from the so-called greenhouse effect, which will warm the Earth as the CO₂ level rises.

But plant scientists are now urgently investigating what they say has been a generally overlooked aspect of the CO2 problem. More CO2 in the air will directly spur plant growth. Some species will receive a much greater boost than others, presumably causing changes in their relative abundance that will ripple through food ehains, reordering wildlife populations as well.

"In the competitive conditions of nature, there will be winners and losers," said Fakhri A. Bazzaz, a plant ecologist at Harvard University. "Some plant species could be eliminated from an ecosystem, while the most responsive ones could begin to dominate it." He said he worries about the "possibility of catastrophie ef-fects in some ecosystems." " Beyond the potential esthetie and scientific losses, researchers are not yet able to say just how the world's economic interests will be affected The fact that increased CO₂ promotes photo synthesis has long been known to botanists and even exploited commercially by greenhouse farmers. Now researchers from the Tree Ring Laboratory at the University of Arizona, measuring pencil-thin cross sections from aged bristlecone and limber pines in the West, have found growth rates to have roughly doubled since 1850.

later rings are obviously much wider, said researcher Valmore LaMarche. "We can't find elimate trends that would explain it. We believe that this is strong evidence that natural vegetation is already responding to elevated CO2 levels."

Although the response of individual plants, especially commercial species, to CO₂ enrichment in greenhouses has long been studied, research is just beginning on the vastly more complex issue of how natural communities will respond to the carbon diox-

An increase in planetary photosynthesis will have its beneficial sides. Since growing plants incorporate carbon from the air into their tissues, stepped-up growth will have the welcome result of slowing the increase of aumospheric CO₂, in turn delaying the arrival of severe elimatic changes from the greenhouse

Agricultural scientists, though worried by the threatened rainfall shifts, regard the prospect of more CO₂ in the air as good news. Not only will crops grow better, but their ahility to withstand drought will improve as well, since higher CO₂ concentrations also boost the efficiency with which plants make use of Taking best advantage of these gains will require adaptations in farming and dietary patterns, though, because some crops will be spurred more than others, changing their comparative economics. Corn, for example, may lose ground to wheat and soybeans because its productivity will not rise as sharply. Consumption of potatoes and yams may jump since tubers respond especially well to CO₂.

Those studying natural communities are less inclined to equate bigger with better.

"Our perspective is different from the agriculturalists," observed Boyd R. Strain, a plant ecologist at Duke University. "The higher growth of one species can be disastrous for the ecosystem." Laboratory studies have shown wide variations in the response of different plant species to higher CO₂.

A hroad distinction exists between those that assimiand C4 pathways. Photosynthesis in plants of the C3 and C4 pathways. Photosynthesis in plants of the C3 category — the majority of plant species including most trees and such crops as wheat and potatoes — is strongly limited by the level of CO₂ in the air. As carbon dioxide rises their growth will be spurred character.

In contrast, the C4 plants — including many grasses, shrubs, and corn — are less constrained by the current CO₂ concentration, and will not benefit as much from elevated levels.

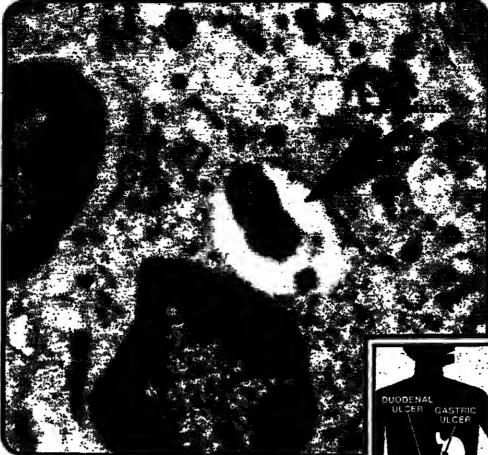

WHEN one plant species gains or loses, its competitors, consumers, and pollinators will all be affected, with reverberations throughout the local web of

For a plant species, even being one of the initial photosynthetic "winners" may not be lucky. If accelerated growth results in a spindlier stem, a plant might become susceptible to wind damage; if a traditionally obscure plant begins to poke through the underbrush.

predators may find the feasting uncommonly easy. The CO2-induced increase in the Earth's total biomass should be much less than what the often dramatie responses of individual plants in greenhouses would suggest. In nature, plants are usually engaged in in-tense competition for light, space, nutrients, and mois-ture; limiting factors other than photosynthetic capac-ity will hold down the system-wide response. "Just cause someone gives you a Rolls-Royce doesn't make you a rich man; you still need a big house and everything else that goes with a wealthy lifestyle," is the analogy drawn by John Hoffman, director of strategic studies at the Environmental Protection

Many botanists argue that vegetation must already have been affected by the increase in atmospherie carbon dioxide from an estimated 260 parts per million to 280 parts per million before the Industrial Revolution to nearly 345 ppm today. Hence they regard the conclusion of the University of Arizona scientists as plausible.

Predicting how heightened CO₂ will alter ecosys-tems presents a formidable research challenge. Until recently it was largely ignored in government grants. A new research strategy drawn up by the Department of Energy's Carbon Dioxide Research Division allots $2.5 million, of a total 1984 research budget of $12.5 million, for studies of the direct effects of CO₂ on plants, including crops, an encouraging if still inade-quate step in the view of many scientists. Bacterium Tied to Stomach Ailments

By Lawrence K. Altman New York Times Service

WO Australian researchers have discovered what appears to be a new spiral-shaped bacterium living

The finding of one more microorganism among the thousands known might have been no more than a curiosity if the Australian bacterium were not now being tentatively linked to some of the most painful ailments known: gastritis, peptie ulcers in the stomach and duodenum, and perhaps other problems as well. Several million Americans have these allments, whose origins are often unknown.

While there is a great deal of skepticism about the importance of the finding, there is a great deal of excitement, too, as the potential implications begin to

It is possible, for instance, that if bacteria contribute to or lie at the root of stomach and intestinal pains, these now intractable problems may be helped, even eured, hy antibiotics.

Another possibility is that some day a blood test may be developed to help doctors diagnose and treat stomach conditions without patients' having to swal-of Legionnaire's disease and other disorders, including some that affect the intestines.

The new finding involves a spiral-shaped bacterium that Dr. Barry J. Marshall and Dr. J. Robin Warren in bacterium in 58 of the patients. It was identified in 87 percent of patients who had a gastric or duodenal ulcer and in 95 percent of patients with evidence of

The new bacteria resemble the S-shaped ones that belong to the genus Campylobacter, But an important difference is that whereas Campylobacter have at most one slender projection known as a flagellum emerging from one end of the S, the newly discovered organisms have up to four flagella.

The resemblance to Campylobacter is a reminder of how with time and new knowledge doctors change their minds about the importance of certain microorganisms,

About half a century passed from 1909 when Campylobacter were discovered in animals until doctors linked them to human disease. In the past decade, low chalky barium while standing behind X-ray machines and without going to examining rooms for the insertion of tubes called gastroscopes that enable doctors to look directly at the stomach.

Underscoring the potential importance of the Australian finding is the fact that in recent years previously undetected bacteria were discovered to be the cause only debilitated adults with serious chronic diseases. you fancy." IN BRIEF

Drug Aids Victims of Rare Disease

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The US Food and Drug Administration has approved a drug to treat victims of a rare disease called Tourette Syndrome. The disease afflicts 100,000 Americans, causing involuntary hiling, shrugging, barking, shrieking and — in 30 percent of the cases—shouting of obscene words. It begins between the ages of 2 and 16 and case a lifetime.

The drug, pimozide, was approved under a special program that allows tax credits and other incentives to firms making products that can belp only a relatively few people and therefore are not profitable.

Hibernating Sheep Goal of Research
LONDON (Reuters) — A British scientist says it is only a matter of time before sheep and other farm animals can be induced by genetic engineering to sleep through the winter, a development that could framatically reduce costs for farmers.

Dr. Richard Lathe, senior scientist at a government laboratory in Edinburgh, said researchers hoped to be able to identify and activate the genes that slow the heartbeat, eventually allowing farm animals to sleep through the winter like bears, saving money on food and care.

The laboratory was also looking at the possibility of gene control to enable cows to produce milk all year round, he said.

Halley's Comet May Be Rotating

PASADENA. California (AP) - Halley's Comet, moving toward Earth

PASADENA, California (AP) - Halley's Comet, moving toward Earth for a 1986 rendezvous, may be irregular in shape or have a patchy surface and appears to be rotating, new photographs show.

The photos, taken through a 200-inch (508-centimeter) telescope at Palomar Observatory in California, show that the light reflected from the comet varies regularly in intensity over a period of hours.

The finding implies that the comet, which passes close enough to Earth to be visible every 76 years, could be rotating and either have an irregular shape or dark or light patches on its surface, scientists said.

Turtle-Watching Is a Lonely Job

BLACKBEARD ISLAND, Georgia (AP) — While most people are askeep, Paul Gideon, the only resident of Blackbeard Island, keeps track of turtles.

Mr. Gideon, 24, a researcher for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, studies the mating and nesting habits of rare loggerhead turtles, which lay their eggs at night. "It's n pretty busy job, 24 hours a day," Mr. Gideon said. "But somebody has to belp these loggerheads or they might become

The turtles, many of which weigh more than 300 pounds and live for Perth have detected in a study of 100 patients suffering more than a century, have been placed on the threatened-species list from ulcers and from an inflammatory stomach condition known as gastritis. The researchers detected the eggs are believed by some to have aphrodisiac properties and high prices

Chemical Might Replace Lawnmower

LONDON (AP) — British scientists have developed a chemical that sturnts the growth of grass without harming it — possibly spelling the demise of the domestic lawnmower, The Observer reports.

The London weekly said the chemical compound, named PP333, not only keeps the grass short but also apparently makes it lusher.

The formula, developed by scientists at Imperial Chemical Industries, is being tested in Britain and the United States with the hope of government approval for its sale by the end of mert year. government approval for its sale by the end of next year.

Vegetables Called Good for Sex Life

LONDON (AP) — Fruit and vegetables can help your sex life, claims a report by the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Information Bureau.

Melons, mangoes, approots, carrots and spinach are rich in vitamin A, which helps convert cholestrol into active sex hormones, while potatoes, bananas and other fruits and vegetables contain vitamin B, which helps manufacture sex hormones, the report said. Dr. Vernon Coleman, author of the book "Bodypower," disputed the findings. "To suggest that individual vegetables have aphrodisiac properties is nonscose," he said. "The only true aphrodisiac is another person

With an army of 127 gymnasts, boxers, rowers, weightlifters and track-and-field athletes, a country with a population slightly less than that of California has bested nearly every other oation at the Summer Olympics. As of Tuesday, Romania had 16 gold medals, trailing only the United States, and was tied for second in overall medals with 36 - this from a country that totaled only 28 gold medals in its last eight Olympic appearances, dating to 1952.

When the Romanian team marched joto the Coliseum for the opening ceremonies, its members received a louder, longer roar than any other foreign team. Olympic funds paid for most of their transportation. The arrival of their former Olympic heroine, Nadia Comaneci, was heralded on the front page of the Los Angeles

Los Angeles Takes the Olympics in Stride

New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES - It was with mate traffic gridlock and grimness

I listened to the advance rumhliogs from colleagues and Olymand khakis and helmet, just as in the old days of covering mine disasters and urban disorders.

But the fear and trembling was overrated. Los Angeles is shrugging off the Olympics, just the way my hometown shrugs off big events. In New York, you could have the pope in the Bronx, a presidential campaign in Staten Island, the Luthe World Series io Queens and never know it in Manhattan.

I can't see that the Games have brought any kind of general happiness to southern California, the way the Winter Games did to Sarajevo, or the 1976 Summer Games did to Montreal, before the bills came due. If there is singing in the streets, I haven't found it - and,

WALL STREET WATCH

How Much Momentum Does The Market Have Left?

By EDWARD ROHRBACH

s there still time to be a high-school hero in the stock market? Judging by the tire marks, a lot of rubber has just been laid on Wall Street. Stocks on an intra-day basis burned to a 150-point advance on the Dow-Jones average, with the Dow transportation index barreling ahead almost 25 percent. The charge has been so fast and furious it's hurt the overall quality of the stock market," warned William J. Gillard, director of investment policy at Kidder Peabody. "Wall Street has become irrational and volatile. It's a very unstable situation.

He said the firm has just advised clients to stop buying and raise some cash. "A huge boulder has been thrown into the pond," he said. "Anyone lishing risks getting his boat tipped over by the waves."

Emerging confidence in Federal Reserve policy and recognition that Wall Street offsendion was Wall Street.

offered low prices touched off the rally, Mr. Gillard said, along with a new-found appreciation in the quality of his boat tipped over by the waves." company earnings.

"What the superbears missed was in looking strictly at reported earnings, not cash flow, which is supplying muscle power and flexibility to corporations," he said. "Their view was simplistic, making stocks appear so overvalued in relation to bonds.

Mr. Gillard expects Wall Street will weather this period of indigestion only when Washington "asserts leadership" in setting down policy to reduce the federal deficit and attack other basic economic problems. But he is optimistic this will happen before "In the meantime, steer clear of high P/E, high-expectation stocks," he advised. "Stick with the more established companies." Favorites he mentioned are Masco, Yellow Freight, Merck and Bristol-Myers.

owever, Martin Zweig, editor of Zweig Forecast, believes the "tremendous thrust" built up in the rally is not to be denied, at least over the oear term. On the oegative side, he pointed to "high premiums" such as for Value-Line futures,

"In sum, the tape is bullish, but scatiment is growing optimistic much faster than in 1982 and monetary conditions are much poorer," he said. "So regard this as an intermediate advance. "It should be profitable, but if interest rates do rise, those who prosper will be those nimble enough at selling sometime a little Laszlo Birinyi Jr. of Salomon Brothers also thinks "too many spigots have been turned on" for this rally to die quickly.

"It was fear of lightning striking twice," he said in answering why it started. "Not only were institutional money managers remembering what had happened in the great surge of August '82, but they're aware of September and October of that year, when there was no correction to let laggards in.

"If you're oot there when the dinner bell rings, there are no

Mr. Birinyi ooted that another "mentality" impetus to the hage bying wave has been that "even if you're wrong, you've got plenty of company."

However, while the big institutions jumped in, he said, individual investors have not yet begin to buy stocks. His computer analysis of trading on Wall Street showed that in last Friday's record volume, there were more transactions in 10,000 share blocks of AT&T — "ar" $19 a genuine candidate for public buying" — than there were 100-share trades.

How long the rally will last, he added, depends on whether the public will step in as they did in the fall of 1982 to give Wall Steet a second wind and whether "the optimistic assumptions the market is oow making will come to fruition."

Richard J. Hoffman, who runs his own investment advisory service for a world-wide clientele, takes a less bullish view of the surge, though he thinks the uptrend it has generated will continue until the presidential election.

"It has been a crescendo rally," he said. The smartest thing now for an investor to do would be to (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

E. Germany Lifts Trade With Soviet

Bows to Demand For Better Goods

WEST BERLIN — East Germany has stepped up exports to the Soviet Union, giving high priority to Kremlin demands for more bal-anced trade, the West Berlin-based German Institute for Economic Research said Wednesday.

It also noted that official statistics indicated that East Germany had scored "considerable successes in industrial growth" in the first half of 1984, with national income up 5.1 percent from a year earlier. Planned growth for all of 1984 is

The anthoritative institute noted in a report that East German exports to the Soviet Union had risen by 18 percent in the first half of this year from a year earlier. Those to the rest of the Soviet bloc rose by

The sharp increase appeared to be a direct response to Soviet com-plaints that Moscow was not receiving the volume of high-quality goods it needed in return for its fuel supplies to East European allies.

East Germany receives some 90 percent of its oil and gas from the Soviet Union.

Western diplomats said Soviet leaders pressed for better exports at May's Moscow summit of Comecon, the Soviet-bloc economic community, contending that high-quality goods were being sold to the West for hard currency while Moscow was neglected.

East Germany specializes within the Soviet bloc in high technology, electronics, computers and conumer goods.

The institute's report said oo details of East Berlin's trade with the Soviet Union were available. Increased automation and better organization had enabled East Germany to exceed growth plans for the first six months of this year despite a real reduction in industrial investment.

Investment, set at 24 billion marks ($8.9 billion) for the half year, decreased in real, or inflationadjusted, terms by 3 percent.
In Düsseldorf, the deputy director of East Germany's Leipzig Fair, Hans Kucnast, said without giving figures that trade between East and Vest Germany had increased in he first half of 1984 and this trend was expected to continue.

In the half, East Germany's foreign trade rose by 10 percent, in-dustrial production by 3.8 percent and productivity by 7.2 percent, he

New York Times Service NEW YORK — With cup in hand, industry after industry has lined up at the president's door asking for belp against imports. This summer steel, copper and machine tools are all waiting for President Ronald Reagan to give them the import quotas they say they need to survive.

They have seen the president award import protection to U.S. textile makers, to Detroit's automakers, to Milwaukee's Hariey-Davidson Motorcycle Co., to Pennsylvania's specialty steel producers and even to its mushroom growers. And now they feel their time has come for relief. While they have turned to the White House, wine makers and manufacturers of telecommunications equipment have taken a different route, marching to Capitol Hill to demand special trade legislation.

With imports at record levels and a presidential campaign under way, the pressures to beat back the wave of foreign-made products "are probably

Big U.K. Banks Cut Base Rate By Half a Point

LONDON — Several large banks Wednesday reduced their base lending rates by half a percentage point to 11½ percent from 12 percent, reflecting an unexpect-ed drop in the British money supply last month.

Analysts said that the pound's strengthening against the dollar Wednesday prompted speculation that a further rate cut may not be long in coming. lo trading in London, the pound rose about a quarter of a cent in $1.3105.

The new rate was announced first by National Westminster Bank and followed by Barclays, Midlands and Lloyds banks, to take effect at the close of trading Thursday. Williams & Glyn later announced a similar cut.

The base rate had risen in 12 percent on July 11 because of a sharp loss in the value of the pound and continuing high U.S. interest ment to enact legislation that would open Japan's buge telephone market to competition. However, on the last day of the current legislative session, the Diet agreed to take up the bill in an extraordinary session in late Sep-

U.S. Stockbrokers Face Tough Times

By Fred R. Bleakley NEW YORK - Wall Street brokers may be cheering the record stock volume of recent days, but the sudden rally will hardly cure all the security industry's ills.

Personnel layoffs and expense cuts are the order of the day at dozens of investment houses. Most publicly owned firms lost money in the second quarter. And Tuesday, just three months after Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb was sold to Shearson/American Express, Becker Paribas announced its sale to Merrill Lynch.

Indeed, the Securities Industry Association estimates that the first six months of this year were the worst for brokers in more than six years. With all this turnoil, many experts believe Wall Street may be headed for another wave of consolidations, similar to those that shrank the industry in 1970 and again seven years later.

Wall Street's plight stems from a "dramatic expansion of the number of offices, personnel, support people and new products beginning late in 1982 and throughout 1983, said Perrin Long, an analyst with Lipper Analytical Services. "Basically the industry overex-panded," he said. "When revenues flattened or declined in the second half of last year and the first two quarters of this year, the firms got caught." In addition, be said, many

Carmakers Say EC's Pricing Plan Would Damage Troubled Industry

BRUSSELS - Carmakers say a European Commission plan to give consumers the right to buy a car the Commission in June and or- ed privately into Britain each year, anywhere in the Common Market, at lower prices for many than in their home country could hurt the troubled motor industry.

With sales stagnating and some companies in trouble, producers say moves discussed by governmenl experts last week to tighten competition rules could price some carmakers out of the market.

They fear it could also bring a new flood of imports from Japan, which has already captured a large slice of the European car market. Buyers are already supposed to be free to take advantage of price differences which make idenocal

THE FOOD LOVER'S GUIDE TO PARIS

By Patricia Wells. 292 pp. $8.95. Workman Publishing, 1 West 39 Street, New York, N.Y. 10018; £5.95. Metheun, 11 New Fetter Lane, London EC4 T4EE.

Reviewed by Frank J. Prial

PATRICIA WELLS'S "Food Lover's Guide to Paris" is one of the more charming and informative guides to the City of Light since Henri Gault and Christian Millau began their guide series 20 years ago. Certainly it's one of the best guides in English. The photographs, which alone are worth the price of the book, are by Peter Turnley. There are 140 of them and, quite simply, they capture Paris.

It's important to get one thing straight: It isn't necessary to be a Cordon Bleu chef or a connoisseur of wisc to love "The Food Lover's Guide." Wells is equally at home extolling the lowly croque-monsieur — grilled ham and cheese sandwich — of the boulevards as unraveling the secrets of Micbel Rostang's goat cheese ravioli or André Lerch's kougelhopf.
There are all the expected restaurant reviews, of course, but there are dozens of small unexpected treasures as well. For example, there is a delightful item explaining the various soft drinks served at outdoor cases, and a brief list of popular calc spacks.

There is a short guide explaining how to order in a charcuterie. There is a history of bread, another on the city's outdoor markets. There is a discussion of whether or not to eat the rind of cheese. There is even a list of well known Parisians who breathed their last at a table, with their napkins on, so to speak.

Take, for example, Dr. Julien Offray de Lamettrie, who went to his eternal reward in 1751 while attempting to down a pheasant after already having "dined pleasantly." Or General Andache Junot, "who generally ete 300 oysters as an appetizer" and died insane, or Leon Gambetta, the Second Empire statesman who injudiciously consumed three generous servings of cassouler while still weak from o gunshot wound.

Wells, restaurant reviewer for the loternational Herald Tribune who was formerly a food reporter for The New York Times and remains a frequent contributor, has lived in Paris for four years. There seems not to be a corner of the city that she has oot poked into and discovered something exciting about.

Her style is oeither breathless nor dispassionate. Genuinely enthusiastic is nearer the mark. "I embrace this friendly, lively neighborhood bistro," she says of La Coquille. "From my first visit several years ago, I've felt at home with the owners, Paul and Catherine Blache, the surroundings, menu, wine list and the effi-cient caring staff.

The book is organized by subjects: restaurants, cafes, ten salons, wine bars, markets, pastry shops, bakeries, cheese stores, takeout shops, chocolate stores, speciality shops, winc and spirits stores, food bookstores, and kitchen and tahleware shops. The listings under each subject are geographie, neighborhood by neighborhood.

Wells is an advocate of the if-you-can't-say-anything-good style of reporting and, if sand, she avoids most of the gastronomic brigands who, alas, lurk in the shadows in Paris, just as everywhere else. Io fact, the only judgment I would question seriously is her kind word for Tartine, an old wine bar on the Rue du Rivoli. But then, everyone else praises it too, presum-ably on the theory that dirt is romantic. But the wines there are awful, and there is no excuse

To food lovers out in Paris at the moment, be assured that there is on better subsotute than Wells's book. It's probably possible to gain weight just by reading it.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE GUIDE TO BUSINESS TRAVEL AND ENTERTAINMENT IN EUROPE

By Peter Graham. 224 pp. $9.95. Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 521 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10175.

Reviewed by James Markham

THIS is an extremely clever and well-con-L ceived guide to 13 Western European cities where a business traveler or oormal tourist might be likely to put up for a few days. Aiming at a relatively up-market, expense account clientele, Peter Graham has written witty and literate introductory essays on Amsterdam, Brussels, Copenhagen, Düsseldorf. Frankfurt, Geneva, London, Lyon, Milan, Munich, Paris, Stockholm, and Zurich and then given an unusually rich collection of advice on airports, local transportation, currency, tipping, telephoning, botels, restaurants, nigh life, music, cinema, theater, museums, sightsee-ing, shopping, sports and weekend excursions. One is pleased to learn, for example, that the Amstel Hotel in Amsterdam has a "slightly overambitious pianist." A jogger in Copenhagen will be grateful to know that Tivoli is too crowded for a run but that if he or she tries a few kilometers around the well-landscaped Orsteds Park, the runner should avoid trying to befriend the swans. Unwilling to write off any of his 13 choices, York Times.

Graham does an estimable job of finding ways to enjoy Frankfurt, while reporting that "It was voted Europe's most boring city by the readers of the British magazine Business Traveller." The author has, for example, discovered that in Frankfurt both pool and carambolage, or pocket-less billiards, can be played from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M. at a place with it's name painted on the wrong side of the entry door.

A few quibbles are in order, perhaps. Why Lyon and not Stuttgart, West Germany's booming hi-technology center, the closest thing Western Europe has to Silicon Valley?

But these are cavils. This is a very good guide and one bopes that the last line of the title "Io Europe" implies an intention to extend a good idea to the rest of the world. If there are future volumes, I would love to read a guide that would tell me how many hours it takes to get from the airport into the city of Lagos, how to get a drink in Jidda or where to go on the weekend from Hong Kong.

Malcolm Lowry's House

By Soll Sussman Associated Press

C UERNAVACA, Mexico — Devotees of Malcom Lowry's novel "Under the Volcano" sometimes come to this resort city in the mountains southwest of Mexico City just to tour its literary land-

But some unlikely preservation-ists here are concerned that a key one - a house where Lowry once lived — might be lost unless the state government can be persuaded to purchase it.

They are hoping that the acclaim for John Huston's recent film version of the book can be translated into momentum for their campaign to preserve what is known locally

as "The Lowry House."
"The significance as far as Cuernavaca is concerned is that Lowry has put Cuernavaca on the map, said John Spencer, a mild-mannered British sculptor and Lowry admirer who has called civic meetings and written articles about the house. "He has presented the world a very accurate picture of Cuernavaca in the '30s."

The house at No. 17 Alejandro de Humboldt Street now has a "for sale" hanner draped in front.

The British novelist rented an apartment in the house while fin-ishing "Under the Volcano" in 1946, and he may have lived in one of the bungalows in the house's lush garden while working on early drafts in the 1930s.

It appears in the book as what Monsieur Laruelle calls his "madhouse." The house's tower - only the base still remains - is the site for a key scene involving the doomed Consul, his hrother Hugh and Yvonne.

The house and grounds now are in dilapidated condition, but on a clear day it is still possible to see the volcano Popocatepetl from the Lowry gave Cuernavaca the name "Quauhnahuac" in his novel, which chronicles the last 24 hours in the life of Geoffrey Firmin, a former British consul drowniog in alcohol. Still attractive in his middle years, he seems among the most favored of men, with rank, education, intelligence and wit, Built around his fatal malaise is the return of his estranged wife who has had an affair with his half-brother. Some critics believe the novel's strong reputation and some read-ers' fervent admiration stem as much from Lowry's troubled and alcoholic lifestyle as from "Under the Volcano" itself. Lowry died in "I just feel that 'Under the Volcano' is a very great oovel. I don't huy that it's a cult novel," said the 56-year-old Spencer, who learned about the book after he came to Cuernavaca 18 years ago.

He started campaigning to pre-serve the house after it was sold to an owner who pressured tenants to leave so it could be converted into a more valuable business property. Allies were found at the Morelos

State Film Commission, which co-operated with Huston on the filming of "Under the Volcano" last

Juan José Perez Padilla, the commission's head, earlier this year obtained a "stop work" court order on renovation of the house.

"I don't have any hope we can raise enough money to make a dent," said Meg Donahey, an elderly American resident of Mexico who works as a publicist for the commission. But, she added, the group hopes that at least starting a se fund would get Governor Lauro Ortega's attention.

A report from architects in-volved in a state government pro-gram to beautify Cuernavaca recommended purchasing the house and grounds for conversion to a cultural center, but the current economic crisis in Mexico makes such purchases hard to justify.

The Cuernavaca that Lowry wrote about in his hlend of fact and fiction was a quiet town frequented hy expatriates.

Cuernavaca remains a resort, but the growth of industry and its prox-imity to giant Mexico City 53 miles to the northeast have made it a city in its own right, where the foreign community is not as prominent as

Spencer, whose frizzy gray hair and wire-rimmed speciacles hardly give him the air of a civic activist, said he has never tried a similar

In fact, they are so taken with slimes and molds and fungi, they have turned their house into a kind of shrine.

There are porcelain mushrooms, glass mushrooms, saltand-pepper shakers and candles in the shape of mushrooms, a mushroom on a plaque in basrelief, a sculpture of an elf standing under a mushroom, pictures and charts of mushrooms on the walls, 73 books on mushrooms, mushroom prints on the bathroom towels, a mushroom mustard pot in the dining room and a papier-maché mushroom on the dashboard of their station wagon. Shirley MacLaine, fresh from her year of victories - turning 50. winning an Oscar, writing a best seller and wowing Broadway with a one-woman show — has signed a new book contract for an undisclosed sum with her publisher, Bantam. The book will be the fourth volume of memoirs and will be titled "Many Happy Returns."

It is due to be published in 1985. Her third volume, "Out on a Limb," published last year, was on the New York Times hardback best-seller list for 15 weeks and was the No. I paperback for 11 weeks. . . . Violet Cliff died with her house filled with antiques and a mint-condition 1937 Ford in her garage.

The Fire Department in Hancock, Michigan, burned it all down because that's what she wanted. "That's the first time I've had to do anything like this, and I hope it will be the last, "said Bill Kotila, chief of the Quincy-Franklin Township Fire Department. Régine, the French singer who owns trendy nightclubs in Paris, New York, Rio and elsewhere, has decided to battle illegal drugs after overcoming a drug problem of her own. "Drugs are a menace that concern more people than you think," she said before a Tuesday night gala designed to raise money for drug treatment centers. For me, it is a personal problem I knew and overcame in my own way."
The gala, featuring a Vivaldi concert at the Cote d'Azur resort town of Villefrance-sur-Mer, France, was attended by European entertainers, including Michel Sardou, Enrico Macias, Sylvie Vartan and Chantal Goya.

Mother Teresa of Calcutta, a Nobel peace prize winner, canceled a scheduled eye operation so she could donate the money to the poor, but an opthalmologist says he'll perform the cataract surgery for free. Mother Teresa was scheduled to enter a Pittsburgh hospital this week but said she didn't need surgery and would rather donate the money to poor people. The opthalmologist, Richard D. Levin, said he doesn't know where to reach Mother Teresa but that he is willing to do the surgery for free. Two friends he would not identify have volunteered to provide the air
